FIND NEW TEST FOR LYMPHOMATOSIS

A way to detect the cancerous disease visceral lymphomatosis in living chickens has been discovered by U. S. Department of Agriculture scientists working at the Regional Poultry Disease Laboratory East Lansing, Mich.

Previously, the disease could be accurately diagnosised only by postmortem examination of chickens for lymphomatous tumors on internal organs.

Dr. E. P. Johnson, animal pathologist at VPI Agricultural Experiment Station, who has followed the research closely, says this is a major discovery, and an important step toward greater understanding of avian lymphomatosis, the worst of poultry diseases. Like human cancer, it has thus far resisted science's efforts to find a cure.

Dr. Johnson says the test to detect the disease is not a simple one, and before it will have practical value, it will have to be determined that it is specific for these viruses and that other viruses will not also produce the reaction.

COMMISSION EXPLAINS REGULATION ON HUNTING WITH DOGS

Executive Director I. T. Quinn, of the Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries, says that the Commission is often asked why it is permitted to hunt deer with dogs east of the Blue Ridge, but not west of the mountains. Quinn says it is not practical to hunt deer with dogs west of the Blue Ridge where the high-powered rifle is in common use and where stalking deer is the usual hunting procedure.

In the low level lands of eastern Virginia, stalking deer is not practical and therefore dogs are used. Hunters take definite stands and remain on them, hoping that the dogs will chase the deer by.

A committee has been set to plan the formal dedication of the new gymnasium and physical education room at the Appomattox High School, now virtually complete. The committee will have its first meeting tonight at the school. It is composed of representatives of the Parent-Teacher Association, Lions Club, IPTAY Club, the School Athletic Association, and school officials. It is the desire of the group to arrange a community event to show the value of this latest addition to the local school plant.

Although the gymnasium is now virtually completed, and basketball practice is ready to begin, with the first game scheduled for December 17, it is not expected that the formal dedication will be held until after Christmas. This view is held because a number of items of equipment will not be ready until well after the holidays. Temporary backboards for basketball and temporary seats will be set, pending the arrival of permanent equipment. Also, the some $1,500 of equipment being given by the Lions Club will not be on hand until after Christmas. It seems desirable that the formal dedication be set at the earliest date after all the equipment is installed.

The gymnasium is expected to be a great asset to the community as well as making possible a modern recreation program at the school.

The gymnasium has been built on contract by the Motley Construction Company, of Farmville. This firm is also contractor for the new elementary school here.

Volunteer firemen render an invaluable service to the community, and merit public support. The annual fire loss here is amazingly low and this is in great measure due to the alertness and efficiency of the volunteer firemen and the excellent equipment provided by the town.
